The patient was a woman, aged forty-four, who was under the care of Mr. Willett. In October, 1882, she came into hospital with a ventral hernia which had been strangulated four days. It contained two feet of gangrenous intestine, which was laid freely open with prompt relief. After the dead tissues had separated she progressed favourably, although her nutrition was defective, and at the site of the hernia two apertures were left; a large one which belonged to the upper end of the bowel, probably the upper part of the jejunum, and which discharged ill-digested food; and a smaller one which was discovered with difficulty, and was supposed to belong to the lower end of the bowel. An enterotome was applied (February 23, 1883) to the tissues between these openings, but without effect, and, therefore, an exploratory operation was performed (April 24th, 1883). The peritoneal cavity was opened, but only the upper end of the bowel could be found, and was left in situ, and the colon, which lay close at hand, was fastened in close proximity to it, with the view of their subsequent union. This was afterwards done (May 31st, 1883) by an operation by which the peritoneum was again opened. As this attempt did not succeed, yet another operation was done; the peritoneum was opened for the third time (September 26th, 1883) and the ileum and colon again sutured and covered with a flap of skin. She left the hospital on December 13th,...
