Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: .conception of the State, and made its practice efficacious, whatever may now be thought of its theory. It would perhaps had been well if Mr. Ki: ig hail grappled with the issue between this point of view and the utilitarian; it would have given fibre to this part of the book, which at present is, and was seemingly meant to be, dogmatic. Mazzini s conception of nationality is of value just at present. The honour of a country depends more on removing its faults than on boasting of its qualities. Patriotism is intense regard for a country s moral greatness. Nationality depended on this sentiment, but it implied a regard for the international division of labour, and a recognition of special aptitudes and special missions on every hand. The European Federation which was to stand upon this basis, and toward which the regeneration of Italy was...
