The incidents of the trial are all so fully detailed in the preceding log, although somewhat condensed, that it seems unnecessary to go over in detail all the adventures and misadventures of each engine. I will, therefore, confine myself to such general comments as may occur to me, in almost any order in which they may present themselves, often by comparison of one engine with another. The conspicuous defects of workmanship in the Huber engine proved their serious importance by the frequent accidents which befell this engine. Its peculiar form of corrugations on the face of its driving wheels demonstrated its unfitness for all conditions of road, by the extreme difficulty with which the engine was made to cross street railways; but it may answer well on some farming land. Its great climbing qualities, due in part to its large factor of traction (l. 280, Table I.), and...
